Help!

Do you have 2 minutes? Help me decide what story to write next by answering three questions.

Yes, I have 2 minutes

What I'm thinking about...

This summer will be the last for Middle before he heads off to college in the fall. Starting in September, we'll have two away at school and only one here at home (not counting Daisy, of course). I've been thinking a lot about the contrast between how slowly those exhausting early years crept by and how quickly high school has flown. I'm sure Smallest is looking forward to family dinners with nowhere to hide. Lots of bonding time with mom and dad = every high schooler's dream, right?

What I'm reading...

Remember how Bridgerton put me in the mood for historical romance? After tackling Eloisa James' Desperate Duchesses series, I kept going, plowing straight through her Wilde family series. So much fun to read and re-read.

Looking ahead, my mood is shifting toward romantic suspense. As a palate cleanser, I read Pretty Little Wife by Darby Kane. (Spoiler alert: NOT a romance) It's been a while since I read a mystery/thriller, and this one kept me up until 2am. Read at your own risk!

If you have any romantic suspense recommendations, let me know.

What I'm watching...

I attribute my shift in mood to the movie Promising Young Woman. If you haven't seen it yet, find a way to make it happen. Highly recommended. You'll be thinking about it long after you finish watching.

For the Marvel fans out there, I can also recommend both Wandavision and Falcon and the Winter Soldier. There's a lot more room for character development in a TV series as compared to a movie, something I appreciate as a writer. Marvel is our go-to for family bonding, and they're building a world full of amazing stories.

What I'm drinking...

Summer cocktail: Wine spritzer

The wine lovers out there are going to send me crankygrams for this, but I love a wine spritzer in the summertime. A little white wine + a little seltzer = magic. I might even (wine lovers, cover your eyes) throw in a couple of ice cubes. Or berries. Blasphemy, I know. And yet, I can drink four of them on a hot summer night and wake up happy the next morning. Hydration is the key, people.

What I'm listening to...

New season, new playlist. This summer it's all about the silly love songs.

May your summer be full of laughter and sunshine.

~ Lisa
